Cold air will continue over Northern California today with some showers, especially in the far northern areas as a relatively weak weather system moves through the region. That will include some snow showers at reasonably low elevations. Some of the colder mountain valleys in the Northeast portion of the Geographic Area and our higher elevations may see overnight lows right around zero under the clearing skies. Some freezing fog and definitely some frost will hit a lot of areas. A series of weather systems with somewhat warmer air and periods of quite a bit more precipitation is expected to flow over the Northern California beginning late Wednesday and last through the weekend. Decidedly winter-weather travel conditions will occur at times, especially in the mountains. Snow levels over the next week look like they will be around 2000-2500 feet at the lowest in the north and about 4500-5500 feet in the south. The most significant snow accumulations will be from about 5000 feet and higher through the weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will be a little below normal through Wednesday, with upper 30s and 40s across the mountains and mid 50s to mid 60s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 20% and 40% through Wednesday. Zonal flow will set up across the region Wednesday night through early next week bringing a little above normal temperatures and high humidity to most of the region. Maximum temperatures will be in the mid 40s to mid 50s across the mountains, mid 50s to mid 60s in the valleys of Central California, and mid 60s to mid 70s in the valleys of Southern California.
